

Academic Year 2002-03

The Department of Political Science is committed to ensuring that all students, faculty, and staff enjoy a learning and working environment of respect. The Department of Political Science is opposed to discrimination in all its forms, whether on the basis of race, sex, religion, national origin, age, disability, or sexual orientation. At the current time, the Department has developed procedures to address sexual and racial harassment. If you experience or witness sexual or racial harassment, or intimidation that you think may constitute sexual or racial harassment, you are encouraged to consult with one of the Department's designated contacts.

The Chair of the Department has identified the following individuals as contacts for students interested in information about how to address issues of sexual or racial harassment. These individuals can help students bring incidents to the attention of the Chair of the Department and inform students about the resources available at the University of Michigan for dealing with sexual or racial harassment. The contacts listed below can also provide confidential information about sexual and racial harassment, campus counseling services, and Department and University policies.
